

FOR GUESTS AND THE PEOPLE WHO REPRESENT THEM

How to pitch The Life Shift

This show is one conversation about one moment. Not a topic, not a book, not a method. If you can name the moment that split a life into before and after, you may be a fit.

BEFORE

Who you were

AFTER

Who you became

What fits

- One specific, named moment, with a clear before and after
- An external event: sudden loss, an accident, a near-death experience, a life-altering medical event, an unexpected tragedy
- The person's own story, told by the person it happened to
- Willingness to keep the whole conversation on that story
- Proof you know the show: a pitch that already follows this format, with no need for a compliment

What does not

- A pitch built on credentials, expertise or a book
- Frameworks and methods, even good ones
- Topic lists, suggested questions, one-pagers and media kits
- A gradual journey or a string of realizations, rather than one moment
- For now, internal realizations and career pivots

How it works

1

You send a short pitch naming the moment

2

The host may ask about the moment, or which one

3

You confirm the conversation centers on the story

4

A short guest form

5

A scheduling link

6

You record. No pre-call

A PITCH THAT WORKS (INVENTED EXAMPLE)

"In 2019 my husband collapsed at our kitchen table. Before, I was a planner who thought she controlled everything. After, I learned to live without a plan. I would love to tell that story, only that story."

A PITCH THAT DOES NOT (INVENTED EXAMPLE)

"Our client is a bestselling author and speaker who can discuss resilience, leadership and mindset. Suggested questions and a media kit are attached."

Set your expectations. The show is run by one person, so replies can be slow and the calendar fills months ahead. A no is usually about fit with the current focus, not about the worth of the story. Please do not send follow-ups before a couple of weeks have passed.
